Couped in a Capsized Vessel.

No seaman ever knew a more terrible and unique experience than that which fell to the lot of Capt. James Morse, of Phillipsburg, Maine, an experience that thrilled the seagoing world at that time. Capt. Morse had been overtaken by a terrible gale, and while "lying to" one of the tremendous waves which plunged along mast high "tipped" the vessel and she was instantly turned bottom up. Captain Morse and a companion were in the cabin at the time, and as the deck was several feet below the surface of the sea they were imprisoned there. They were in absolute darkness, standing in water up to their waists, seemingly helpless and doomed. But Captain Morse and his companion were not the kind of men to surrender to the seemingly inevitable until forced to do so. Groping about they found a hatchet and decided to hew their way to the upper air. Knowing that as soon as an opening was made the air, which was shut in by the arch of the inverted hull would escape, and the water take its place, they were obliged to work with the greatest caution lest they make a fatal leak before there was a hole large enough to permit of their escape and so be drowned like rats imprisoned. For days they worked, cutting away the ceiling and planks until they could catch the gleam of light through the thin wood in one place, then cutting again until another part was similarly cleared and so on until the light, passing through the slight surface, marked the lines of a square place large enough to admit the free passage of a man's body. Then, when every possible preparation had been made and there seemed to be nothing more that they could do to insure the success of the final move, they knocked out the obstructing square and crawled into the daylight as the water, freed from the opposition of the compressed air, followed them, and the vessel sank lower into the water until the natural buoyancy of the timber checked her. There they were, perched on the curved surface of a capsized wreck, drifting at the mercy of the seas. But they had no idea of surrender. Having escaped to the light they at once set to work to build up a sort of signal station to attract the attention of any vessel that might chance to come that way, and upon the top they fixed a staff from which fluttered a signal—a shirt. Fortunately a brick-laden schooner passing that way sighted the signal of distress, bore down upon and rescued the men, who were almost exhausted by their days of suffering there, their torn hands showing how they had labored there in the terrible darkness, but they soon recovered, and no one talking with the captain to-day would suspect that he had once dug his way out of a sepulcher of the sea.

Saved from a War-times Sawbones.

"The most terrible exhibition of barbaric cruelty I witnessed during the war occurred at Richmond, Ky.," said Capt. J. E. Elgin, of Louisville. "I was with the gallant John Morgan, and more to the pity that the brutality I refer to was perpetrated by one of our men. He was a young surgeon, just out of a medical college, and his blood was aflame with ardor for the Confederacy. When the battle was ended I was placed in charge of one of the hospital corps. We were going over the field ministering to the dead and dying, and my attention was attracted by the piteous wails of a man close to the line of the federal intrenchments. There was such a distressful pathos in his cries that I hurried to him. When I got close enough to distinguish his words I heard him plead: 'For God's sake doctor, kill me! Don't cut my legs off and leave me a cripple!'"

"At a glance I saw what was going on. The pleading man was a Union soldier with only a slight flesh wound in the thigh of the right leg, which disabled him temporarily only. His tormentor was the enthusiastic young surgeon, who had just joined our command. The juvenile reprobate had deliberately bound the poor devil to a log, and was leisurely preparing to saw off his left leg for no other reason in the world than that he wanted to disable the soldier for further service during the war. He had stripped the man's leg bare to the thigh, tied a string tightly around it seven inches above the knee, and had marked off with the point of his knife a streak around the leg where he intended to make the amputation. My duty was plain. At first I thought to shoot the inhuman monster down in his tracks, but I realized that his punishment would be sufficiently severe when John Morgan and Basil Duke learned of his offense, so I placed him under arrest, marched him up before those men, and told them what I had prevented him doing. He was promptly placed in chains, a court martial soon tried him and sentenced him to be shot. Sufficient influence was brought to bear, however, to save his life, though he was cashiered from the army. By some means he made his way north, began the practice of medicine at Reading, Pa., and to-day is the rankest hater of the south, perhaps, in the State of Pennsylvania."
